In her latest works, conceptual artist Anette Lemieux, a member of the Pictures Generation, mines TV, film, and literary history to focus on "isolation, division, and brokenness," according to the gallery. In one work, titled Midnight Sun and made in part from a film still from The Twilight Zone, Lemieux depicts an artist painting in vain amid a heatwave that melts the pigment off her canvas. In part a reflection on the difficulties of the vocation, the work also references wider looming troubles ahead.
